OIL.

It is difficult to make any careful generalizations upon the subject of oil, and yet without them the public are liable to form their opinions from individual cases, which, if they constitute the rule, will enlighten them; but if the exception, will mislead them. It is currently stated that fifteen hundred oil companies are now in existence, all of which are necessitating more or less capital, earned in other branches of industry and investing it in the hope for still. Of these the Oil News estimates that only one hundred and eighty, or less than one in eight, are producing any oil whatever. Of the list of Pittsburgh companies the Gazette, of that city, in a recent number, gives a list of one hundred and two oil companies, of which only fifteen are reported as paying dividends, and of these three went in November last, two in December, five in January, one in February, two in March, one in April, and one in August. Seventeen companies, out of the one hundred and two, are assessable, and the remaining eighty-five are confidentially supposed to be the dupes of the former. They propose to spoil the market by a movement to that end. Lafayette is the head of order in which the oil fever of the day has reached its highest pitch. The Journal of the Times says Lafayette is stepping stone that will show shorter lengths of advanced value. The assertion that belongs to the Lafayette Company, which is now being organized, and can call Stephen's cabin without hurry, the projector of the enterprise has given up to stay, and that the Lafayette Company is to be the only one in which he has said, and that because we are to be interested in both companies. The Lafayette Company is to be the only one in which he has said, and that because we are to be interested in both companies. The Lafayette Company is to be the only one in which he has said, and that because we are to be interested in both companies. The Lafayette Company is to be the only one in which he has said, and that because we are to be interested in both companies.

The quotations of the Pittsburgh Board are [illegible]

At the Board note sessions local stocks were dull. We give their value as follows: Union Bank, 80; Wagner Bank, 90; Exchange Bank, 80; Citizens' Bank, 80; Bank of Commerce, 80; Oil Bank, 80; Ohio Valley, 80; Peoples, 80; Philadelphia, Lancaster and Cherry Run, 80; Mingo Coal, 80; Mackenzie, 80; and the others, 80. Very little, however, can be determined by the ratio of the stocks to their par value, owing to the extent to which they have been watered.

It is to be regretted that this data yet published for circulation at the amount of money invested in the oil business are so exceedingly limited. Eight millions, it is estimated, have gone into Pit Hole alone, in the form of bonds, engines, machinery for boring, labor, leases, and other expenses. Certainly official sanction hitherto would have a proportion to that total. While the oil interested, which would be the first to profit by it. As you have seen, the Oil Exchange of the capital which has good out of Chicago, no returns have been received. Several more Bank Associations, each with a capital of $50,000, left Chicago for California, to develop the Siskiyou oil farm. The only oil which has yet reached from it is reported up in the Pacific Express, and that at the rate of [illegible] amounts to $72,000. One rule of finance may be as safely applied, probably, to oil companies. It is, say one-third of the capital invested in any enterprise is always a great way off, and [illegible] per bed to them [illegible]

TELEGRAPH MATTERS.

The development of the energies of the people of the United States, since the close of the war, has already begun to exhibit itself in a manner almost startling to the world. Its first stands in relief to great that its value and importance as an essential factor towards a new era in the progress of our race. The interest attached to it proves no more than an interval will be given to the subject of these remarks. Throughout the length and breadth of the land, there is not a man, woman or child who is not in some way or other interested in the progress of the telegraph system of the continent, that carries on the enterprise principally by the North Pacific Coast, traversing a wilderness to meet the similar enterprise progressing across the northern states. There is no room to doubt that the Collins Overland Telegraph will be a success, then attached to the construction of the line to San Francisco. It is simply a question of bulk of obstacles, not their kind, and these always must necessarily be limited by cost.

We believe in the Atlantic Cable. We believe in the Intercontinental scheme of Portland. It is only a question of time.

DISASTER IN CRIMINAL CASES.

The pilloried yesterday the facts and results, so far as we have yet learned, in the case of Martin Gahagan, of Abingdon, Ill., who appears to have attempted the murder of nearly every member of a woman and child that came in his way, by the use of poison. In being succeeded in the murder of six persons, and very nearly succeeded in the murder of as many more. Mrs. Grisdor is no ranting, rabid, glaring, gibbering fiend, such as we are accustomed to conceive of when the word "monster" or "lunatic" is mentioned. On the contrary, she is described as a "keen, sprightly, dashing woman," who could travel up and down with all the performances incidental to giving birth to a child, so adroitly as to one could suspect her condition. Her only reddening an infant that was to no way related to her, with ten thousand dollars, and on another to poison the death of the child thwarted the two attempts. Her motive in poisoning all her neighbors to the funeral of the child and had attended to one, if it had lived, for a similar purpose, is a question. Yet in many of these poisoning cases there appears to have been no motive whatever for the crime, and no temptation except that she had the opportunity to poison, and if any person chanced to die, to be present at the funeral and lamentation. We suppose this want of motive or provocation will be relied on in her behalf as presumptive proof of insanity, and the jury, like Mark Harris, are to be "politely and dashing, she will, with all her cunning and duplicity, be either remanded to a comfortable home in some private asylum till the medical disciples pronounce her "cured," or she will be acquitted altogether. Yet the blood of at least six persons is upon her hands, and cannot be [illegible] subtle and guilty soul. Shall she, too, enjoy the impunity accorded to the "interesting" young murderess of Judson Burroughs? Then not to the cases of Southern murderers, of the plea of insanity, as heretofore perverted by wayward juries in behalf of notorious men and pretty women. The real defense of John Harris was that he was insane, and if we compute these divisions on the total capital stock of the companies, then the same tables would show a total investment for the [illegible] companies of $27,470,000, and [illegible] a total of earnings of $120,500, or a fraction over the half of one per cent on their nominal capital. If they have disposed of their total capital stock, and if we compute the said dividends on the whole capital stock, there will then result a total earning for the [illegible] of [illegible] per cent. We say nothing in this result to excite the oil fever.

Again, the same authority estimates the whole daily product of Western Pennsylvania as follows:

"From trustworthy data at hand we find that the whole daily product of Western Pennsylvania is nearly seven thousand barrels. This amount is distributed as follows: Allegheny county, on Oil Creek, 1,500 barrels; on Joe's run, on Oil Creek, 1,000 barrels; an average of 50 barrels per day, at Pithole, 1,000 barrels; Tarr Farm, 500 barrels; Petroleum, 500 barrels; shipments from Oil City to Pittsburgh, 1,000 barrels; Parker's Landing, 500 barrels; Great Western Railroad, 500 barrels; Shamburg, 500 barrels; Parker's Landing, 500 barrels; Oil Creek, 500 barrels; Franklin, 500 barrels; French Creek, 500 barrels; Emlenton, 500 barrels; Clarion, 500 barrels; Cross, 500 barrels; Smith's Ferry, 500; all other points, including Butler, Mercer, Crawford, Venango, Warren, Indiana, &c., 500. The number the great oil regions is estimated at 7,000 barrels per week, 1,000 barrels per day."

By a similar process, the total product of Ohio, where boring is going on, in thirty-six counties, while the oil production is confined to a few places, is estimated at five hundred barrels per day [illegible]

West Virginia is estimated at 1,140 barrels a day, of which Burning Springs, Globe Creek, Sand Creek, and Horse Run are the principal, 2,000 barrels, and 140, a fluctuating [illegible] added for all other localities. Kentucky is limited at 200 barrels, and California, where, in some accounts, an oil exists, "is safely estimated at not over 20 barrels." By adding all other States and producing sections at 80 barrels, the present daily product of the United States is made to amount to the figure, 9,268 barrels of crude oil per day. This, at rating rates at the wells, would be worth $4,703.25, giving a total production for the year 1865 of 2,717,820 barrels, worth, in its crude state, $10,000,000.00. Probably this is not an over-estimate, as the actual oil product for 1864 is stated at $20,000,000. The actual product for a few months past in Pennsylvania has greatly diminished, however, in the product of last year. The above product would give for each of the 240 companies nominally producing it, should the production continue for the limited [illegible] an average of [illegible] barrels, worth $41,671.66 per annum, and the [illegible] would pay an interest at 40 per cent on about one hundred and sixty millions of dollars, or an average of [illegible] per cent on the bona fide capital of the entire 1,500 oil companies, which [illegible] $20,000 to $50,000 of bona fide capital. As all this refers however to the gross product of oil, out of which we have to deduct [illegible] wastage and loss by wells drying up, we do not think [illegible] will not in these facts, so far as they go, any startling prospects of ever [illegible] fortunes from the field clearly before their minds, according to the Oil News, that 1,320 out of the 1,500 oil companies have assessed [illegible] while only a single well, or oil, The following brief epitaph, which we extract from the same journal, marks the final resting place of some:

"One thousand shares of a certain company were sold in New York last week for five dollars and fifty cents a piece, and cheap at that."

THE LADIES.

I intended yesterday to write this letter two or three days, inasmuch as I had nothing to say, I desired to postpone. But had I really both on that ground. I could not have written a worse spell. It was on the path of Sherman's army in the winter of 1863-4, and everything in the shape of a "writer," whether horse or mule, which was old enough to be used at all, was exercised off. But I had to write, and I suppose only gave me the better opportunity to keep up my assumed character. I never was a lady's man, even in my best days, and now that gray hairs are scattered plentifully over my head and occasional wrinkles appear on my face, it is not to be expected that I would make much headway among the admired females, unless they were widows, in the age when half the men of Dixie are in their graves, and I have always remembered Sam Weller's advice, to beware of them; nevertheless, I have had numerous social chats with the females of this section (the north part of Smith County) and have been highly pleased at their political views. At one house, I requested some dinner, and there was a diddle aged, healthy looking woman, and her four daughters, two grown, the others in their teens. I supposed they had plenty of the "substantials," and yet they asked to be excused as they had no help in the house, the last colored woman, a "likely gal," having left on the preceding night. The mother told me neither she nor her daughters had ever cooked a meal in their lives, but their self-reliance when they had baked some corn bread and fried Side bacon. They had four in the family, but could not make biscuit, and as I had two cows, but could not milk them. I would have offered to milk their cows for them, but this act of gallantry would at once have revealed the fact that I was a Northern man, and at that time, and at that distance from a Union camp, I was not ready to do so. I remembered the fate of refractory negroes, and also the other fact, that the Southern people upon the Yankees as being as degraded as the black himself, and one whom it is no more sin to kill than a dog, although I do not believe I should not have been disturbed, or even interfered with had matters come to a pinch, I was after "facts," and I knew the only way to obtain them was to travel in the disguise of a Southern gentleman.

I finally got some corn bread and bacon, and left the family a good deal [illegible] I do not know; neither do I care.

All of the women, or nearly all, are as violent as ever, and are ready to die rather than submit to subjugation; but I am satisfied that the rebellion is forever dead. The negro will be free, and the women of Secession sympathizers, and the rebels threatened to turn Northern citizens out of doors, and to confiscate their property, but I am satisfied now that they will not attempt to execute the same treatment for you as they have for the negroes.

Then I rode on about two miles, and stopped at another house in which there were an old man and his old wife, and a middle aged man and his wife, also fifteen children, from the eldest to the youngest. I was invited to dinner, and there was no refusal. The table groaned with the fare of the country. The old man was a Union man, and had been driven from his home by the rebels, and had returned after the close of the war. The conversation was principally upon the future of the State, and the old man was very much disturbed in his mind as to what would be the fate of the negro. The intelligence is forcing itself upon the Southern people that the negro is free, and that he will not work for them unless they pay him wages; both he and his wife were of the opinion that the negro would be harder. When I say this is the universal remark, I mean, of course, that it is so among the white people, for I have had no chance to converse with the negroes, and I do not believe any person who has sufficient of common sense to judge human nature will form any of these things.

With reference to the outdoor employment of males, I am inclined to think that the [illegible] will witness the exit of the last field laborers of the negro race, and that the whites will perform all the outdoor labor in the future. It is a fact that the whites are now doing the work in the fields, and it cannot last long. I know the negro can do not desire their wives to work in the fields, and it cannot be done [illegible] of circumstances, and no general rule will apply.

THE POOR WHITES.

Up to this time, my intercourse had chiefly been with the better class of whites, as it was no my object had been to obtain information relative to the opinions and intentions of the poor whites, as I have seen without number in all parts of the country, and I had only contented myself with their appearance, and the [illegible] of their cabins. I had only contented myself with their appearance, and the [illegible] of their cabins. I had only contented myself with their appearance, and the [illegible] of their cabins.
